Instead, the cards show images of 72 numbered fallen angels - angels who, according to legend, have fallen from grace or been banished from Heaven for various reasons. In some cases, in Christian mythology, their fall was because they refused to bow before Adam and accept him as a superior being, others became Earth-bound because they fell in love with beautiful mortal women and took them as wives.

deck have committed at least one of the seven deadly sins to secure their place in the legions of the damned. The cards in Nigel Suckling's oracle are similarly rich with experience, and devilishly direct - Zepar, the angel who makes women love men, reveals the complications of an affair; Gusion, who can discern the past, present and future, calls to let intuition rule; while Shax, who has the appearance of a stork, warns people to protect their wealth. Choose a card for daily insight, or lay them out for a reading. The accompanying book reveals the card's meaning, and explains each angel's history. The illustrations, by artist Sarah Perkins, have been specially commissioned to evoke the dark charm of these fascinating, mysterious creatures, all of whom offer a special message.
