* Use an extension tube (or bellows extension) * Use a teleconverter * Combine above accessories in an optimal way Extension tubes and bellows move the lens further from the film plane thus allowing photography at closer distances. Teleconverters increase the focal length of the lens thus allow covering a smaller area from the same distance.

The easiest way to achieve this is to add a single 32 mm extension tube, and use only 24 mm of extension provided by the focussing helicoid). Since we already know what magnification we need, we can step into formula 3, and calculate the shutter speed factor: $(0.23 + 1)^2 = 1.51$, and using formula 4b convert this into stops: $\log(1.51) / \log(2) = 0.59$ stop
